The Dead and the Dying at Savannah

Special to the Constitution.

SAVANNAH, GA., Oct. 14.

For the past few days the death rate has not varied much. The weather is still unpropitious, and we can not expect an abatement of the scourge before the cold season sets in.

Among those who have died to day, we regret to announce the name of Sister Birchman, formerly Mary Weston of New York state.

Richard North, son of Captain North of the ship Preston, died to-day.

John B Deppish, of the firm of Pulman & Deppish, is quite sick at Thunderbolt, five miles below the city.

Rev. Fathers James Kelly and John Potassi, who were but a few days ago stricken with disease, are in a dying condition to-night. Devoted in their duties while in health, they braved the terrors of the epidemic even unto death itself.

Capt Thomas Lyons, harbor master, became a victim to the fever to-day.

Capt J F Wheaton is not so well to-night. It is hoped that he will speedily recover his wonted health

THE ELECTION.

Full Returns and the Successful Ticket

The primary election of yesterday passed off very quietly, and with no excitement worthy of mention. As will be seen from the returns below a very full vote was polled. Each of the numerous candidates had a number of friends at the different precincts, who worked faithful. They accomplished very little, however, in the way of changing votes, as the city had been so thoroughly canvassed that nearly every voter came to the polls with his ticket fully made out. Two attempts at fighting enlivened the day, but they were quietly checked by the police, and the excitement was only momentary.

We are afraid that this morning's sun will rise upon some badly disappointed aspirants for municipal honors, but these sorts of disappointments will happen occasionally to a man in spite of all he can do, and the best way to get over them, is to preserve one's temper and get readily for the next race. Considerable crowds were collected around the 1st and 5th ward precincts during most of the day, and especially as the hour of closing the polls drew near. Bets were freely made on the result, and the merits of the different candidates warmly canvassed. The other precincts were unusually quiet.

THE STATION HOUSE.

The station House was well patronized last night, as it usually is on election days. Divers patriotic gentlemen were locked up who under the influence of the occasion had exceeded their allowance. Sixteen cases had been made before 12 o'clock. Three for fighting and the balance for drunkenness.

TOWN TOPICS.

—"Belle of Kentucky flour, Golden sheaf flour." I hope to be able to supply wholesale trade only, the above celebrated brands of flour in ten days. Our mills hope to catch up with orders by that time. The trade may make up their minds to pay, before the first of January, 50 cents per barrel advance on present prices.

J. W. FEARS

—On last Thursday night Evans Chapel was filled to overflowing to witness the happy marriage of Mr Charley Parsons to Miss Sallie Crawford. The solemn rite was performed by Rev W C Dunlap, by the use of the beautiful and impressive ceremony of the Methodist church.

—Bets are being made freely in the in the 7th district two to one that Dabney will be elected

—Gen. J. Warren Bell, of Washington, is in the city on a visit to his son, Major W W Bell, cashier State Savings bank. He thinks that the result in Indiana insures the election of Tilden.

—Col. W. T. Trammell and daughters of Griffin have returned from the centennial.

—Sugar cane in abundance.

—The through line of cars to Ponce DeLeon has been taken off.

—Jack Johnson left for Rome yesterday.

—'Twas in the circus at Dalton he spied her, and she sweetly said: "Judge, this ain't me."

—If the other statements of the correspondent of the New York Herald who went to Ellenton, S C, to write up South Carolina matters are not more reliable than his statement that "a reporter of an Atlanta paper visiting the scene a week after put the deaths at 90" the Herald should discharge him and employ a correspondent who would recognize the truth occasionally. The reporter of the Atlanta paper never said any such thing.

—There are few things better than a good shave. Dick Huff can give you that at the Kimball House barber shop, where he has good barbers, sharp razors and clean chairs over clean marble floors. A trial will convince.

POLITICAL BUZZARDS.

CHAMBERLAIN'S OFFICIAL CALL FOR TROOPS.

Some Sore-head Virginia Radicals Want Them too—Other Political Matters.

Telegrams to the Constitution.

Chamberlain's Call.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—The Herald's Washington dispatch says the written application of Governor Chamberlain for troops, to aid him in enforcing the law as chief magistrate of the state of South Carolina, arrived here to-day and was placed before the authorities. The answer of the secretary of war, after consultation, was, that he should await the return of the president, which is expected to morrow.

Considering It.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14—The president and Attorney General Taft returned this morning.

Secretary Cameron has gone to Philadelphia, and will return to-morrow.

The consideration of Chamberlain's request for troops for South Carolina, was postponed until Tuesday.

Direct from the Devil

The present application comes direct to the president from Gov. Chamberlain, who asserts his inability to prevent domestic violence.

Some parties have intimated to the authorities that trouble is probable in the second and fourth districts of Virginia, and suggest that marines should be held in readiness and a company of troops sent from Fort Monroe to Norfolk. In giving this item, the authorities withhold the names of the persons making the suggestion. There are indications that Judge Taft will be overruled in his disposition to act on such suggestion.

The Contest Becoming Close.

Woodward, on civil suits with Tweed, are all prepared, but can not be served till Woodward finds bail on criminal charges, and as the bail required is three million dollars, and as the prisoner is fitting up his cell very neatly, it is generally thought that he will not attempt to secure bail, but will await his trial.

DISRAELI'S HOME.

Hughenden Manor, its Surroundings and the Pursuits of the English Premier There.

London World, September 27.

Countrymen—perhaps because they know comparatively little about other matters—are severely critical on all who aspire to distinction in their own walk of life; and Lord Beaconsfield is hardly endowed with the temperament proper to a country squire. A lenient landlord and highly popular among the few whom he favors with his friendship, he is hardly looked upon by his people as the ruler of the little community over which he holds territorial dominion, or by the county magnates as one of themselves. With the fox-hunting squires and game-preservers he has no community of tastes. Living in the midst of pleasant woodlands, he has none of the ordinary attractions of country life to offer his visitors. No cherry crackle of pheasants is ever heard in his coverts, and the sound of breech-loaders never wakes the echoes over the many acres of his upland stubble. At his country house his life is one of almost seclusion, to which only a few select guests are admitted, who care more for brilliant literary companionship and the attractions of a well ordered table than for the relaxation of rural pleasures. The rest and retirement which he finds here are welcome and pleasant after protracted labor, but they are enjoyed at long intervals, and then somewhat sadly. The premier when in retreat is much given to solitary wandering among the woodland paths, which taste of the late Lady Beaconsfield did so much to beautify, and probably he is not far wrong in preferring this communion with nature to an interchange of thoughts with his neighbors on parochial politics. In the woods themselves there is much to justify the preference. The tall and noble beech trees that crown the knolls above Hughenden and flank the house on either hand with delightful shadowy groves, have long furnished material for the industry whereby the people of Wycombe mainly exist; and the owner, as he walks through the apparently interminable paths, has the proud knowldge that these woods are not beautiful wildernesses growing simply for his selfish indulgence, but as much a means of giving food to the toilers as the bright corn-fields that are charmingly set in their fringe of dark foliage. So cunningly are the narrow paths cut along the contours of the hills—now jutting out with a swelling spur, now running back into a sudden hollow—and so thick the screen of foliage on either hand that the visitor seems to wander through endless avenues of vast woodlands, while he is really traversing a narrow curve. If he catches once a glimpse of some sunny upland, or the gable of a farm-house rising above tree-tops, his next view of the same object will be from a point which alters the aspect of things that he seems to be looking on an entirely different scene. Thus a hundred or two acres of woods, a noble park and a manor farm swell, by the aid of subtle art, into the proportions of a grand forest, surrounded by smiling homes set in the midst of rich fields and diversified by charming pleasure grounds. Not that the beach woods are of mean extent, even when the trick that magnifies their proportions has been discovered, and they have points of attraction which the lover of nature would willingly linger to contemplate in serene leisure. Tall, straight shafts of ruddy pine, crested with rustling needles alternate with the swelling gray boles and delicate foliage of the beeches; here and there the narrow twisting paths widen into open glades, where only a few giant trees are left standing to give a chequered shade to the verdant sward of a trim lawn, and then close again into delightful shady avenues.

In these woods it was Mr. Disraeli's pleasure to wander, when Lady Beaconsfield would superintend the planting of trees and the cutting of paths; and there he delights to wander still, with head bent contemplatively, hands thrust into the deep pockets of his velvet coat, and a broad felt hat shading his brow. But deep in thought though he may be, his step is jaunty and his eye is quick to note all that passes around him. Except the path that leads from the town to the little rural church lying under the shadow of the great house, all are closed against the vulgar herd by the stern "Trespassers will be prosecuted;" and when the lord of the manor is known to be at home few venture there. Still when he meets any of the country people, on his own domain or in the neighboring byways, he seldom omits an opportunity of acquiring some information about their calling that may serve him for happy illustration. His visits to the farms down in the hollow and away over the hill are frequent, and the outcome of the long conversations with the shrewdly practical tenants may be marked in his next speech at a Buckinghamshire agricultural gathering, when he discourses learnedly on Oxford-down sheep or the proper succession of crops. One source of information he has neglected; some of his cottagers, who have lived on the estate for years, have never received a visit from him up to the present hour

Hughenden house, promising much from its towering situation on the crest of a bold knoll, where it rises high above the ranges of level terraces, and, from the dignified expanse of its broad front, is somewhat disappointing. The renaissance ornamentation that incrusts windows and parapets is the veneer of a very prim eighteenth century mansion; within there is no renaissance vastness or richness of decoration in which the exuberant oriental fancy of the owner might be expected to revel. A narrow hall leads, on the one hand, to a dining that is almost severe in the simplicity of its bare paneled walls, straight-backed chairs and colorless drapery; on the other, to a library that a half study, half drawing-room, where the earl spends much of his time during his visits to Hughenden. As a compromise between the somewhat Bohemian comfort dear to artistic minds and the ordered luxury and affection in which those of more feminine tastes delight, this room perhaps embodies more than any other in the house the character of the man who is the presiding genius of the place. Writing tables, couches covered with yellow satin and profusely gilded, oak cabinets ornamented with caryatides columns and entablatures of Dresden china, make up a whole so confused that the ordinary mind fails to grasp at once the uses to which such a room may be applied, though none can fail to appreciate the taste that can combine so many incongruous elements, and yet subdue anything like tawdry effect. A door from this library leads into the drawing room where love of gilt chairs, gaily-flowered hangings, tables inlaid with pearl, and cabinets thickly crusted with Dresden china and porcelain, is indulged to the full. On the walls, among other paintings, hang Koberwein's painting of the queen presented by her to the prime minister, D'Orsay's youthful likeness of Mr. Disraeli, and Chalon's painting of the face which inspired the Right Hon. George Dawson with those pompous lines in which he describes the fair original as

> Intelligent and gay—the joyous smile
> Speaking a bosom free from art and guile;
> Pure as the consciousness of well-spent life;
> Perfect as friend, as daughter, sister, wife.

Her spirit still lingers round the house, and though many things—among others the low wicket—have disappeared, every corner of the place still breathes something of her presence. The elaborate tomb by the chancel of the little church, the tall monument on the hill raised by her in affectionate remembrance of D'Israeli the elder, but inscribed also with the name of Mary Disraeli, Viscountess Beaconsfield, are not the only memorials of the lady to whom Hughenden owes so much. It has been more than once said of Mr. Disraeli that he held with a light and readily relaxed grasp the objects that he apparently cherished most. This certainly can not be said of him in his home life. In the simple little study up stairs, where he takes his matutinal tea and toast—the Earl of Beaconsfield is not an early riser, and seldom appears at breakfast—and where, by the aid of Mr. Montague Corry, he gets through the mass of official correspondence that is always heavy even in his days of retirement, he sits surrounded by memories. Miniatures of his father, mother and brother hang above the mantel-piece, and portraits of departed friends or colleagues look upon him from the walls; while he gazes from the windows on broad terraces bright with variegated blossoms and flanked with noble beeches and firs, where traces of the wife's loving care still linger. The walls of the bijou morning room, of the staircases and of the yellow room, set aside for the most distinguished visitors, are all hung with sketches or paintings of those whom the ties of friendship or long association in political work have endeared to the lord of Hughenden.

The manor over which the youngest of our earls holds dominion has been associated with not a few names of distinction. In a chapel of the old church are many knightly tombs of the De Montforts and Wellesburns, once lords of the manor. At Hughenden Phillip Stanhope, earl of Chesterfield, frequently resided while the estates belonged to him. But of all its successive owners none has made more distinct a mark on his age than, or imprinted his name in characters so brilliant on the page of history as, he who, uniting the dash of a Montfort with the polish of a Chesterfield, has, step by step, risen to be prime minister of a mighty empire.

OUR ONLY DANGER.

What the South Should do About the Election Law.

New York Sun.

The whole scheme of the present administration, which reaches by a bold usurpation to the control of elections by the intimidating presence of troops at the voting places, is based upon a law which places at the polls a horde of federal officers, who are supposed to be present because the state officers are not to be trusted, and who can practically prevent the state officers from exercising their appropriate function of determining what votes to receive and what to reject. Upon this foundation a superstructure has been erected, consisting of interpretations of the late constitutional amendments which the supreme court have rejected; and the consequence is that we have on the part of the federal administration, at a time when it is acting with all its resources, as an open partisan, to secure the election of a particular candidate for president, a claim of federal and executive power to seize and imprison individuals upon the pretence that they are interfering with the rights of other individuals to vote.

At this thoughtful men have become alarmed. They begin now to see that the distribution of federal troops through the southern states, to act under the marshals and their deputies at the polls, may not only be to overawe the democratic masses, but also to force such returns as the central power wielding this kind of machinery may choose to have made. There is but one mode in which the nefarious scheme can be defeated; and this is for all southern voters to carefully avoid being drawn into any collision with the federal authorities that will furnish an excuse or driving or dragging them away from the polls; to exercise their rights of free discussion and pursuasion with their fellow citizens, fearlessly but calmly, taking care to perpetuate the evidence of all improper interference with the exercise of those rights; and relying on the certainty that with the overthrow of the republican party, the day for the deliverance of the whole country will surely come.

Husbands and Wives.

The clever and rather cynical author of the paper, Virgnibus Puerisque, in the Cornhill Magazine for August, expresses in a refined way a feeling which thirty years ago found constant expression in literature, but has more recently passed into oblivion. He advises everybody to marry, and even tries, like Mrs. Hannah More—whom, nevertheless, he would despise, as much as he does a teetotaller—to instruct his readers whom it is best to marry; but all through his pleasant sentences one detects a faint but perceptible contempt for the domestic man. He has the notion of a generation ago in England, and of to-day in France, either that the domestic man is a very good fellow spoiled—a man who would lend you his last shilling before he married, but becomes a moralizing curmudgeon afterwards—or that he is by nature a variety of the genium fribble. With a cynicism in part of course put on for literary effect, but in part expressive of a real opinion, he tells the girls whom he addresses to select, when they can select, a husband who likes lounging in his garden, and enjoys small occupations, and has an infinity of acquaintance but no friends, and is generally of the type to which it is the fashion in funny literature to say that most curates belong. The opinion will do no harm, for girls of our day, besides being more confined in their selection of husbands by the excessive competition, than perhaps girls with free right of choice ever were before, and besides being curiously contemptuous of any opinion on love and marriage which they may find in print, have decided against that sort of husband, and when they get him, as they often do involuntarily and put up with him afterwards with a sense of resignation, as often, it may be added, good tempered as acidulous. But though it will do no harm, the opinion, as a mere opinion on society, seems to us so utterly unfounded that we wonder if it is at all general, or one of those odd survivals which remind us every now and then that old opinions, which now look so antiquated, as if a mind were showing itself dressed in some obsolete costume, were once as influential as any now professed.

The notion of to-day, certainly amongst women, and we should have said among men, is precisely the opposite of the one in Cornhill—that it is not the man of petty interests and trivial occupations who is the domestic man; that is the man with whom an average woman can live happily, but the man of keen interests and absorbing pursuits, to whom home and the wife and the children and the closing out of external pressure bring the sense of rest. There is no rule which philosophers can devise for choosing either husbands or wives wisely that has very much effect, for the young do not trust the old upon that subject, and choice, for women especially, is by no means so free as we all affect to believe. Not one woman in fifty, unless she is for some reason—such as fortune, rank or beauty—a great catch, has anything like a real power of selection among admirers; and even when she has, she often gives it away, in obedience to a passing, possibly sensible, blundering, fancy that she has found an ideal. But we should have said there were two broad rules still worth teaching, because they had some chance of being believed, and they were these: let the woman's first requisite be a man whose home will be to him a rest, and the man's first object be a woman who can make home restful. It is the man with many interests, with engrossing occupations, with plenty of people to fight, with a struggle to maintain against the world, who is the really domestic man, in the wife's sense, who enjoys home, who is tempted to make a friend of his wife, who relishes prattle, who feels in the small circle where nobody is above him and nobody unsympathetic with him, as if he were in a heaven of ease and reparation. The drawback of home life, its contained possibilities of insipidity, sameness, and consequent weariness, is never present to such a man. He no more bored with home than with sleep. He no more tires of his wife than of his own happier moods. He is no more plagued with his children than with his own lighter thoughts. The worry, and the sameness, and the weariness are all outside, and home no more insipid than his berth to a sailor, or his tent to a soldier on active service. He gets from the home just the change, the fillip, the pleasant stimulus which the idle man receives from the society he happens to enjoy. There is not much champagne in life, any how, but for the active man most of the little is at home.

Granted that sense of peace at home, and the profession of the husband, the temperament and even the character become of minor importance. Let a man be politician, or barrister, or merchant, or anything except a sailor—when a different class of considerations come in—so that he be but a man with work afield and outside interests, and a struggle to keep up, and he will be, nine times out of ten, a domestic man, that is, a man in whom wife and household can, if they like, awaken keen affection of the enduring kind. Of course, temperament and character count for much, and your sweet-tempered man of grave humor will be pleasanter to live with than an irritably-masterful will, but the first requisite, the strong, unswerving affection, may be, and usually will be found in both, as it never can be in the worst of all husbands, the pleasure lover, who seems so nice, but who finds everything but social excitement so insipid that very dreariness makes him as cantankerous as many a pretty dog. It is not only that he wanders or wants to wander after strange goddesses, as Mr. Trollope puts it, but that he grows so weary of the home, where everything is so same and so tame, and so like flat beer, that it is impossible for him not only to be happy, but to feel that he is less unhappy there than anywhere else. We do not mean that the domestic man, in the wife's sense, will be always at home. The man always at home has not half the chance of the man whose duty is outside it, for he must sometimes be in the way. The point for the wife is that he should like home when he is there; and that liking, we contend, belongs first of all to the active and strong and deeply engaged, and not to the lounger or even the easy-minded man. In marriage, as in every relation of life, the competent man is the pleasantest to live with and the safest to choose, and the one most likely to prove an unwearied friend. The occupation does not matter at all, nor the temperament much—we assume, of course, some original liking, the stronger the better—provided always that the occupation is vigorous enough to leave home the endless charm of mental repose. The man who feels that, is devoid at once, when at home, of the most trying characteristics of husbands—does not worry, does not complain, does not fidget, does not bully—if not from nature, then from the feeling that this is not the time nor here the place where he wants to be as disagreeable as it is his nature to be. People, novelists especially, are always expressing surprise that So-and-So, who is such a brute in business, should be so amiable at home, but the surprise would be more reasonable if it were otherwise. Nobody except a Hazlitt, or a man of that sort, who ought to be kept in a box, and only let out to fight bores, ever is a brute just when he feels thoroughly rested, and that is what the active man, and the active man only, feels within his home.

But, then, it must be home—and that is just the point where the rule we have laid down for woman begins to operate for men also. They at least have the power of selection, and they would, if they were wise—which, as a rule, they are not—use it to select the woman who can make home attractively restful. It may be said that every kind of quality goes, or may go, toward that, till the rule becomes a mere platitude, a repetition of the usual mother's advice to choose a good wife, but it is not quite so. Every good quality is a good, no doubt; even beauty, for though beauty is only skin deep, nobody in our day is likely to be skinned. But the master quality of all—for the kind of men for whose behoof we are writing words which, on the first opportunity, they will forget—is, after all, capacity. As we should say to women who wish for domestic happiness, never marry a lounger, a pleasure seeker or a fribble; so we should say to men with the same yearning; never marry a fool of any sort or kind. There is no burden on earth like a foolish woman tied to a competent man—unable to be his sweetheart, because she can not help dreading him; unable to be his confidant because she cannot understand him, unable to be his friend because she cannot sympathize with his ordinary thoughts. No beauty, no sweetness—though fools are never sweet when things go wrong, or they have to put up with anything—no amount of that household capacity which many men so absurdly overrate, as if any able woman could not learn to manage a household in three months—can compensate for the absence of clear thought, quick comprehension, ability to follow and credit or discredit a statement of fact, competence to understand what the husband is.

This is the rock on which thousands of the marrying men of this day split. Themselves fairly cultivated, if only by their share in the movement of the time, which squeezes the stupid in a sort of hydraulic press, the secretly dread intelligence in women, fancy that foolishness is softness, and will tell you, when they speak out, that they do not want the cleverness to be on the wife's side. They do not want to be seen through, and fancy, with a strange humility, sometimes touching, sometimes ridiculous, that if seen through, they will not be loved. They have somewhere in their heads a secret belief that intelligence and the domestic virtues cannot go together; that a wife who can feel intellectual interests will never be content to stay at home and look after the children; that a clever woman will, above all, be incapable of worshipping themselves. There never was a theory more unreasonable, more mischievous, or more influential. It is, we imagine, utterly hopeless to attack it in print, for men read the answers, assent to them with one side of their heads, and then reject them with the other; but they may rely on it that it is false; that there is more capacity of affection, of domesticity and of self-sacrifice in the able than the foolish; that cultivation diminishes selfishness, and that it is the ignorant who are most dependent on external circumstances for the continuous geniality of character. It is not the stupid or the blank minds which make allowances either for defects or idiosyncrasies, and the sweet reasonabless which they are seeking, though they do not know it, is never given to the silly.

FOR CONGRESS:

MILTON A. CANDLER.

OUR HOME FIGHT.

We are promised an interesting fight near at home. The republicans have forewarned us of their settled intention to make the congressional race in this district worthy of our active attention. They evidently mean to make good their words.

Against our gallant Candler they have brought to the front an old and respected citizen, William Markham. He was a union man and since the war has been a republican. He is a man of wealth, personal influence and political ambition. His nomination was a shrewd piece of business and it is fair to assume at the outset that the radical party in this vicinity has never before worn so decent a figure-head.

What does it mean? The question has been asked repeatedly and for two purposes. First, to ascertain why Markham has consented to enact the role of a political tool and martyr, and second, to suggest what hopes the radicals are counting upon for his election. So far as Markham himself is concerned it simply means that his ambition to figure as a public man has gotten away with his sound judgment. So far as his backers are concerned, it means several things which deserve enumeration.

1. Who puts Markham forward? It is the federal office-holders' ring of Atlanta. The manner of his nomination and the scenes enacted at the so-called convention are so fresh in the public mind as to make their rehearsal unnecessary. He is, as a congressional candidate, the creation of a twin-body of federal pap-suckers which is domiciled in the United States court building and the postoffice in this city. They and their satellites "found" Markham, they took him by the arms upon either side and escorted him, they presented him to the people and they are his backers and friends. No whisper of the popular voice penetrated his ears, no message from the body of the people asked him to "come out," and no cry of welcome greeted his appearance. He is before the people as the representative of the radical office-holding ring; he is their drummer for business—the new sign over the shop door of the same old firm.

2. Why was he brought out? It was the beginning of a speculation—nothing more. They have invested in Markham as they would in a pool on an Oregon or Maine election. If they win, their party gains one more vote in the house of representatives against the democratic majority, democratic prestige in the district and State will be broken, radicalism in Georgia will take new vigor, but, nearest and dearest of all, under a Hayes administration the office-holders' ring would be safe! Under the peculiar civil service of radicalism, Markham would claim the right of Warwickian power in Georgia, and through him the ring here would control federal appointments. That is the real milk in the cocoanut.

3. What are their hopes of his success? They hope that his high social position and reputable character will disarm democratic opposition, arrest a vigorous onslaught of the people against the leader of the same old radical horde, and that many good people, looking only at Markham, will say: "He is of our city, a good enough man, and no harm can come of voting for him; give him a trial." They hope that Markham will be able to win success where the real body of the enemy would meet with crushing defeat. They are using Markham in order to ape decency and claim respectability for the reason of wearing a new hat. They hope to win by this strategy and they are playing the game adroitly.

The people of Atlanta and of the fifth district have a duty to perform and they must resolutely determine to do it. They must route Markham and the legion of foes who are stealing along in his shadow. Our district has done nobly enough in the past and the record it has made must be sustained. Our gallant standard-bearer is everything that could be claimed for Markham; he has abilities and talents to which Markham is a total stranger; he is a representative man and his congressional record is without reproach. He is entitled to the support of every true patriot and honest democrat in the district. Let him not fail to receive it on election day.

"ORGANIZED" DEMOCRACY.

Our correspondent "Jackson," who appears to understand the question pretty thoroughly, calls public attention to several facts not mentioned by Dr. Miller, in his letter against "organized" democracy. We should prefer to see harmonious views prevailing among the true friends of reform, pure democratic principles and the better administration of the government. It is in the interest of such harmony that we desire the people to know that the letter of Dr. Miller furnishes no reason for "bolting" at this time and will be, if relied upon, a sorry excuse to any democrat who acts upon its suggestions, thereby aiding our enemies to defeat the party in the pending contests.

So far as Dr. Felton is concerned few people will go farther than we in awarding to him all the praise and honor that he has justly earned. But Dr. Felton cannot expect all who admire his abilities, or acknowledge his service, to endorse him in his present attitude. His seeming best friend, Dr. Miller, does not claim that the democratic nominee is even less able or less honorable than Dr. Felton; nor that the democratic nomination was a fraud, a political intrigue, an attempt to wrest from the people the right to choose their own representatives. We do not understand Dr. Miller to go so far, even, as to characterize the democratic organization of the seventh district in the attitude of attempting "to establish party tyranny or perpetuate party slavery." Dr. Miller simply proceeds upon general and elementary propositions of individual political right, readily acquiesced in by all. If he should succeed in causing any one to believe that by the nomination of Dabney such rights were jeopardized the calculation is that Felton would gain a vote. The point we desire to make to the people is that such an emergency has not arisen; the danger does not appear; the "independent" panacea is not in place.

Col. Dabney is the representative man recommended by the delegates of the "organized" democracy to their constituency; he is proclaimed by his blameless life, his honorable career, his abilities and education, and by the endorsement of his party, a man worthy to be honored and who will truly represent his people. More than these can hardly be claimed for Dr. Felton, and yielding all of them to him as his right, he fails to meet the demand of the hour in one great essential. He is not the pledged adherent of a democratic constituency and its system of reform principles sought to be introduced into the administration of public affairs; but Dabney is! Therefore let the democracy of the seventh "organize" and stand by Dabney!

THE CITY ELECTION.

The result of the city election will be found upon our local page. We think our city may be congratulated, as it has secured the continuance of good administration through a good board of councilmen. We always sympathize with defeated democrats, but they with all good democrats will cheerfully rally to the ticket nominated and give it a hearty support.

Though the vote polled is considerable, we have never known less excitement to prevail at any previous election. We are glad to chronicle this fact, as it reflects credit upon our citizens, who felt the importance of the ballot they were casting, and voted quietly for the men whom they thought most capable of continuing the prosperity of the city by a careful management of its finances and by the faithful discharge of their duties generally. Such are the men we need, and with them the progress of Atlanta will know no halting. We trust the ticket chosen yesterday will be elected without opposition.

THE radicals say the south is made solid by shot-guns, but they made Ohio solid by "repeaters."

THE telegrams show that it is now positively ascertained that Banning, democrat, has been elected to congress in Ohio.

COLORADO has not been heard from yet. Congress will have to appoint an investigating committee to unearth its centennial state.

THE democratic rooster is driving the honors of the centennial year with the American eagle. He is a game bird and this is his fighting season.

"GOVERNOR HAYES has been gathering a collection of historical books relating to Vermont," says an exchange. He had better be gathering a collection of "Tourists' Guides to Salt River."

THE proceeds of the entertainment given by our High School girls realized one hundred and sixty dollars for the yellow fever sufferers. Our girls deserve praise.

THE plot thickens. Chamberlain calls for troops and will get them. Is the American soldier no longer to be the guardian of the people's liberties?—is he to be made the tool and slave of thieves and dastards?

THE Northern journals are greatly aroused about "solid Georgia" and complain that the radical vote was not as large as it was in 1868. Without arguing the point we will state a fact. There were only 50,000 tickets printed for the use of radical voters in the recent election. Of these some 35,000 were probably voted. In many counties no tickets were furnished to the voters. How then does the New York Tribune imagine that the radical vote should be counted out at ninety-odd thousand?

Ohio and New York.
[From the Albany Argus.]

There have been twenty elections in this state since the organization of the republican party.

The republicans carried the state four times, in consequence of democratic divisions: in 1856, 1858, 1860 and 1872.

"Union" tickets were chosen twice: in 1861 and 1863.

The republicans carried New York four times with two tickets in the field: in 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1871.

The democrats carried Indiana, Ohio and New York twice: in 1862 and 1874.

The democrats carried New York with Ohio against them seven times: in 1857, 1859, 1868, 1869, 1870, 1873 and 1875.

The democrats carried New York with Ohio and Indiana both against them in 1868.

THE Courier-Journal remarks that the account of Hayes' safe-keeping of the soldier boy's $1,000 "reads like an old romance of the days of the freedman's bank." That is well put. The republicans have a way of keeping things so safely that their owners can never get them again.

LUCY HOOPER, writing of the modern French dramatic authors, classifies the elder Dumas as sensual, George Sand as immoral, Flaubert and the younger Dumas sickeningly realistic, Zola nasty and Belot beastly.

HE said he "bleeve he'd take his'n jes so," as he'd "hearn that the city cisterns was dryin' up, and when the precious fluid was gettin' so scarce, 'twant no use a wastin' it when one hadn't ought to."—New Orleans Bulletin.

"KISS-ME-IF-YOU-DARE hats are out." Whether this means only a maidenly resistance or whether it is a threat that the offender shall be overtaken by the bitter bill of matrimony the challenged must decide for himself.

BOSTON GLOBE: A Pittsburg man has just got home from the Black Hills. He says that there are no Indians out there, and that provisions are cheap and plenty. Also, that he doesn't intend to return under any circumstances.

NEW ORLEANS BULLETIN: She wouldn't stand to have a tooth pulled for one million two hundred thousand dollars, she said, and yet she walked Canal street all day in tiny gaiters two sizes two small for her, and thought nothing of it; but then nobody saw that tooth, and several saw the gaiters.

IT is gratifying to notice that even the stringency of the times does not tempt good men from the path of truth. A stranger was in town yesterday trying to sell for a curiosity a boat compass, which he stated has been in his family over five hundred years, and was reported to have been owned by Pontius, the pilot, though he frankly said he could not vouch for the last statement.—Norwich Bulletin.

FROM PUNCH.—"Scene—the ballroom of a fashionable seaside hotel; Lady Godiva Highjinks (to her partner during a pause in the valse)—'A—I can't help thinking I've met you before.' The partner—'Yes, my lady, many's the pair of white satin shoes I've 'ad the pleasure of fittin' on your ladyship at our 'ouse in the Burlington Arcade. And '—(sinking his voice to a facinating whisper)—'I must say that a more hexquisite foot than yours, my lady, I never yet 'eld in my 'and.'"

WEDDING EVE.

At the single silver chimes she hies,
With golden lights in the brown of her hair,
She carries away my heart and my eyes,
And leaves me her kiss at the foot of the stair

Two plump white arms are around my neck;
Her mouth and her eyes and her heart kiss mine;
She kisses me words she will not speak,
Kisses like sunlight mingled with wine.

Up the broad hall stair she passed away,
Into the shadow out of the light;
With her last "good night," for after to-day
She and I never shall say "good night!"

WHAT THE OWL KNOWS.

Nobody knows the world but me,
When they're all in bed I sit up to see;
I'm a better student than students all,
For I never read till the darkness fall;
And I never read without my glasses,
And that is how my wisdom passes.

I can see the wind. Now who can do that?
I see the dreams that he has in his hat;
I see him shorting them out as he goes—
Out at his stupid old trumpet nose.
Ten thousand things that you couldn't think,
I write them down with pen and ink.

You may call it learning—I call it wit.
Who else can watch the lady-moon sit
Hatching the boats and the long-legged fowl,
On her nest the sea, all night, but the owl?
When the oyster gape to sing by rote
She crams a pearl down each stupid throat.

So you see I know—you may pull off your hat;
Whether round and lofty, or square and flat,
You can never do better than trust to me;
You may shut your eyes as long as I see.
While you live I will let you, and then—I'm the owl—
I'll bury you nicely with my spade and showl.
—George MacDonald, in Good Things.

MAMMA'S PARIS HAT.

"O, mamma, see the baby's
Got pretty fowers for 'oo;
He didn't det 'em in the fields,
Nor in the garden too.

"An' he got 'ittle deaded bird,
He can't fly wif his wings.
Hasn't got any nest nor eggs,
An' can't sing any sings."

"O, what has mamma's baby done?
What has that child been at?
My bonnet that was never on,—
My lovely Paris hat!"

STANDS BY HIS STATE.

The Governor of Mississippi to Attorney-General Taft.

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 4, 1876.

Attorney-General Taft, Washington, D. C.: In the report of your speech at Cincinnati, of Sept. 28, you make reference to Mississippi affairs, which deserves notice at my hands. I am more than willing, and have been able to execute the laws in Mississippi and conserve public peace. There is neither intimidation nor threat of intimidation. Both parties assembled in public meetings without let or hindrance, and both parties canvass without interruption in every county. The reports to the department of justice in regard to this state oftentimes allege wrongs in communities which receive first intimation of the said wrongs in dispatches from the national capital. I am aware evil-disposed people seek to misrepresent, but I think it is not fair the state should be condemned by wholesale without hearing. I ask, then, as a matter of justice to Mississippi, you give me names, dates and places of wrongs alleged to have occurred in this state reported to your department. The perpetrators of wrongs are responsible to state authorities, and I am able to bring all such to justice, and am determined to do so. I have done so thus far, vague reports to your department notwithstanding. Mississippi is quiet and orderly, affording amplest protection to all. She should not be prejudiced in the eyes of the nation on charges evidently made for political effect. I send by mail a copy of the registration law, that you may judge by reading it whether your charge of intrigue be well founded. Complaints of its working have only been made in one county.

J. M. STONE,
Governor of Mississippi.

Dr. H. V. M. Miller and the Organized Democracy.

Editors Constitution: The letter of Dr. Miller to the Marietta committee is certainly a remarkable as well as a mischievous document. The avidity with which the distinguished doctor throws it into print, shows the quo animo in which the author gave birth to the monstrosity.

The mistake however, was with our Marietta friends. They presumed upon the honorable doctor's democracy and cast their "pearls before the swine." He seizes the opportunity to give democracy a stab. Modesty at least would have suggested that he leave the propriety of the publication of his letter to the committee to whom it was addressed, but here the animus that inspired the epistle is again patent, and it is rushed into print before Mr. McClatchy and his friends have even glanced at it.

When did Dr. Miller ever intend to be a democrat? Echo answers, When? He has had numerous opportunities (for the democratic doors are ever open), but he has spurned them all! It may well be said of him that "Ephraim is joined to his idols. Let him alone, let him alone."

When did democracy, the organized democracy, if you please, ever intend or calculate to wrest from the people the power to choose their own representatives? Never—no, never!

The democratic party has ever been regarded as the people's party. One of its cardinal principles has always been, "the greatest good to the largest number."

Dr Miller draws largely upon his imagination when he asserts that Andrew Jackson was once an independent candidate for the presidency. If he was, he was defeated, and, at the same time, was the means of defeating Wm. H. Crawford, one of Georgia's honored and noblest sons; thereby electing John Quincy Adams, a federalist, and for the first time in the history of our country, defeating the organized democracy, which Dr. Miller says "had ruled the country with regal sway." But Mr. Crawford was not the regular nominee of the democracy any more than was Gen. Jackson. It had been the uniform practice of the democratic party, up to that time, to nominate candidates for president and vice president by a congressional caucus. There were two hundred and sixty one democratic members in congress at that time. In the meeting which claimed to have nominated Mr. Crawford, only sixty-six members attended; a large majority of them being from the states of New York, Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia. You see here only about one-fourth of the number (by no means a quorum) attempting to nominate Mr. Crawford. The remaining three-fourths were the adherents of General Jackson, who had already been placed in nomination by various state legislatures. General Jackson never was a bolter nor an independent candidate. This occurred in 1824, which Dr. Miller says he was old enough to remember. It is to be presumed that he will also remember that he rejoiced over this defeat of both Jackson and Crawford and the election of the younger Adams.

Do not be uneasy doctor, no doubt Cobb county democrats and all others will henceforth draw very sparingly on your "zeal for an organized democracy."

"JACKSON."

A TOUCHING ROMANCE.

A Sad Termination of a Promising Union—A Story of Blasted Hopes.

San Francisco Bulletin.

More than a year ago the Bulletin published under the heading of "A Charming Romance," one of the truest stories of worthy love and laudable ambition ever told. Briefly related, the facts are these: Lieutenant Philip Reade, a young army officer, heard in Topeka church choir a voice so sweet and musical, so tenderly sympathetic, that his soul was touched to know more of the sweet singer. He sought her acquaintance, was introduced, and found a young lady struggling against the hardships of pecuniary misfortune to make headway. She was ambitious to go abroad and study under great masters in the foreign lands of poetry and song. Her genius, her aspiration, and more than all, the nobility of her character and her modest worth, found admiration in the mind of the young officer. He made her case his own, and so readily responded to every aspiration of her young life that he willingly pledged his own fortune to enable her to go to Italy and there finish her musical education in the best schools of Florence and Milan. Poor in purse as she was, she declined to accept the gift of so much money. Alone and with the aid of money earned in local concerts and private tuition, she visited Boston and further progressed toward the fame which she longed to achieve. Her refusal to accept money increased rather than diminished the young officer's regard for her, and he renewed the offer of aid to Minnie Beals, for such was her name, with a proposal of marriage. They were married in New York, one morning, more than four years ago. At noon, on the wedding day, the bride sailed for Italy, and the husband started for Arizona, where he had been ordered on military duty. Frequent letters brought him tidings of her success. Her voice was like a "string of pearls," said one renowned impressario. Time went on, and she made her debut in the finest theater of Florence, to a dense assemblage of music-lovers. Fortune seemed to smile, and she secured an engagement to sing in the leading theatres of Europe. Her singing in Constantinople elicited the highest praise from the press and the populace.

During the past year every letter exchanged between the two referred to the happiness reserved for the reunion. The aim of their lives seemed to have been realized, and they had by common consent centered every hope and thought on expected enjoyment of what had been obtained at the cost of so many sacrifices and the peril of so many adverse chances. She had fixed the date of her departure from Italy next November. Fate fixed it otherwise. A single sentence from a strong man, utterly crushed and broken down, concludes the story:

"SAN DIEGO, CAL., Sept 5.—Minnie Reade died August 24th

"PHILIP READE."

Mrs. Reade died in Paris. Lieutenant Reade has been stationed on the southern border over a year, in charge of the military telegraph construction party, and is at present in San Diego.

Searching the Scriptures.

Cleveland Plaindealer.

A neighbor found a slip of paper the other day which, from the following memoranda penciled on the sheet, would seem to indicate a landable desire on the part of some German Bible reader to (be) come familiar with leading biblical personages and events by noting an abstract for the purpose of memorizing.

A Voice from the South.

The following extract from a recent speech by ex-Gov. Hubbard of Texas may be taken as an antidote for the blood-and-thunder doctrines preached by Morton and his fellow-patriots:

You have been told that we are demons in hate, and gloat in the thought of war and blood. Men of New England—men of the great North! Will you believe me when, for the 2,000,000 of people whom I represent, and the whole south as well, I denounce the utterence as an inhuman slander and a damnable and unpardonable falsehood against a brave and, God knows, a long-suffering people? Want war! Want bloodshed! Sirs, we are poor—broken in fortune and sick at heart. Had you stood, as I have stood, by the ruined hearth-stones, by the wrecks of fortune, which are scattered all along the shore; had you seen, as I have seen, the wolf howling at the door of many a once happy home—widowhood and orphanage starving, and weeping over never-returning sires and sons, who fell with your honored dead at Gettysburg and Manassas; could not hear, as I have heard, the throbbing of the great universal southern heart—throbbing for peace and yearning for the old and faithful love between the states; could you have seen and felt and heard all these things, my countrymen, you would, black or white, republican or democrat, take me by the hand and swear that the arm thus uplifted against us, the tongue which utters the great libel in your name, should wither at the socket and become palsied forever at the root! I repeat again, let our "spears be turned into pruning hooks," to remain everlasting memorials of returning peace and good-will to the American people.

Sir William Thompson on the Centre of the Earth.

London Spectator.

A remarkable address has been delivered by Sir William Thompson in the physical section of the British association on the subject of the fluid or solid nature of the earth's kernel.

While not denying that certain portions of the earth's interior are in a molten or fluid state, Sir William Thompson maintained, on various more or less recondite grounds, that no large portion of the earth's interior can by any possibility be in the condition of molten fluid. "I may say, with almost perfect certainty, that whatever may be the relative densities of rock solid and melted, at or about the temperature of lique-faction, it is, I think, quite certain that cold solid rock is denser than hot melted rock; and no possible degree of rigidity in the crust could prevent it from breaking in pieces and sinking wholly below the liquid lava. Something like this may have gone on, and probably did go on, for thousands of years after solidification commenced; surface portions of the melted material losing heat, freezing and sinking immediately, or growing to thicknesses of a few metres where the surface would be cool, and the whole solid dense enough to sink. This process must go on until the sunk portions of the crust build up from the bottom a sufficiently thick ribbed skeleton or frame to allow fresh incrustations to remain, bridging across the now small areas of lava-pools or lakes."

That is a striking picture of the growth of the round earth, which was once supposed to have been made "so fast that it cannot be moved." We are rather sorry to be robbed of the belief in the central lava after all.

She Was Too Fastidious.

Burlington Hawkeye.

It was late. The leaden sceptre of the sable goddess was stretched above the slumbering world and yet they stood at the old front gate, and he wound a protecting arm around her lithe form to shield her from the falling dews. Her exquisite head dropped upon his shoulder and the love light shone in her lustrous eyes. It was now or never. He would know his fate, be it bliss or misery. He pointed to a star, not one of the terrible shooting stars that crowd the cemeteries of Burlington with the unburied slain—oh, no, not one of those destroying angels, but one of those fixed, glittering orbs that know their places and stay in them; and spoke: "Darling, by yon bright orb I swear—" "Oh, don't say that," she murmured, and her voice was like the sound of flutes upon the water; "Leander Smith said that, and he ran away and married his uncle's kitchen girl the very next week." "Dear one," he resumed, "by the blue arching dome that bends above, I—" "Oh, no," she sighed, rubbing a prescription of Laird's Bloom of Youth and hair oil upon his cassimere shoulder, "don't say that, please; Orestus Johnson said that, and just think, pa found out before the affair went very far that he had two wives in Indiana." "My own," he once more tried, "by every whispering breeze that touches with its balmy kiss the sleeping flowers, I——" "Oh, please, please, don't say that," she said in pleading tones. "Mr. Trevelyan La Rouke said that, and do you know, it turned out that he was a waiter in a Water street restaurant, and he came up one evening dreadfully intoxicated, when we had company, and burst into the parlor and shouted to pa to set out 'Large plate beefancabbage welldonan gravy potatoesmashed oneplate liveranonions, cornbeefash, coffeetwo and blackberry both!' Oh, don't say that; it sounds dreadful to me." "Day star of me life," he tried, "bright gem of ——" "Oh, no, no, no," she sighed wearily, "not that. Mr. Van Tresslewick said that, and the next week we saw him at the circus, in a suit of red and white stuff, sitting in the middle of a sawdust ring, tying his legs in a bow-knot around his neck, and crawling through a hoop not half big enough for him. Oh, anything but that!" Well, then," he said, in despair, "It'll be nothing, for I'll be dad binged if I've had time to learn any more. I ain't a walkin' lover's dictionary." "Sir-r-r!" she said, assuming an erect posture. "Madam," he said stiffly, "adieu." She went into the house with a face like a shield that was white on one side and brown on the other, and he strode down the sidewalk with one shoulder looking like a whitewasher's advertisement, and a long curl of raven hue hanging to the collar of his coat. They never met again.

Chandler Forcing Hayes to Shell Out.

Columbus (O.) Statesman, Oct. 2.

There was a startling rumor on the streets of the city Saturday afternoon and all day yesterday regarding the new mode of conducting political campaigns, namely, "betting on elections." Zach Chandler, the unprincipled chairman of the national republican committe, informed Gov. Hayes by letter that unless he took the state of Ohio in October by a substantial majority, that the committee would drop him and leave him to fight his own battle. It was intimated to Hayes by Chandler that unless he raised sufficient funds for that purpose, the republican party would regard him as an interloper—a dead weight on its hands. This so nettled Hayes that he sought a loan of $150,000, and procured it after depositing sufficient collaterals. The major portion of said loan was obtained from capitalists in this city, the rest of it from well-known politicians and bankers, each party requiring sufficient collaterals. The division of the funds was a subject of discussion among the politicians, but it was unanimously decided to appropriat a certain amount for "betting purposes" in order to create as in last year, a public opinion.

Salutary Stimulation.

When vital action is sluggish, a stimulant, provided it be pure and properly medicated, is the most reliable agent for imparting the necessary impetus to the semi-dormant organs, accelerating the languid circulation and averting the maladies to which functional inactivity gives rise. Physicians who have employed Hostetter's Stomach Bitters in their practice pronounce it the most salutary tonic stimulant they have ever used, and especially commend it as a remedy for torpidity of the bowels, liver, stomach and kidneys, and as resuscitant of vital energy. The medicinal value of the Bitters is due to the fact that with their basis of pure old rye are combined, in perfect chemical harmony, the best restorative and life sustaining elements known to medical botany. The Bitters never deteriorate in the most unfavorable climates.

Public Notice

Is HEREBY GIVEN, that under and in pursuance of the power and authority contained in that certain deed of trust bearing date the first day of July, eighteen hundred and seventy, and made by and between the Atlanta and Richmond Air-Line Railway Company of the one part, and R. A. Lancaster, W. K. Easley and Alfred Auste of the other part, and in compliance with the direction in that behalf contained in the decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia, made at October term, 1875, in a certain suit in equity therein pending, in which Skipwith Wilmer and Auguste Richard are complainants, and the Atlanta and Richmond Air Line Railway Company and others are defendants (and in and by which decree the undersigned John H Fisher was appointed a trustee under the said deed of trust in the place of the said W. K. Easley, who was deceased, and with all the rights, powers and authority under the said deed of trust which were possessed by the said W. K Easley in his lifetime), and in compliance also with the decrees of the Circuit Courts of the United States for the District of South Carolina and of the Western District of North Carolina, confirming the said decree made by the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia:—We, the undersigned, will on the fifth day of December next, between the legal hours of sale, to-wit, ten o'clock a. m, and four o'clock p. m. on that day, in front of the county court house of Fulton county, in the city of Atlanta, in the State of Georgia, sell at public auction, the entire railway of the said The Atlanta and Richmond Air Line Railway Company, extending from the city of Atlanta, in the State of Georgia, to the city of Charlotte in the State of North Carolina, together with all its franchises, lands, buildings, machinery, rolling stock, materials and other property, real and personal, wherever situated and in what-soever manner held, and whether owned and held by the said company at the time of the date of the said deed of trust, or thereafter acquired.

The terms of such sale shall be as follows:

1st. The premises will be sold in one parcel to the highest bidder for cash.

2d. Ten per cent. of the purchase money of the said premises will be required to be paid to the undersigned trustees at the time and place of sale and immediately after the premises shall be struck down, and the purchaser will be required at the same time to sign a memorandum of his purchase.

3d. The residue of such purchase money will be required to be paid to the said trustees at the office of John H Fisher, as receiver of the said railway, in the city of Atlanta, on or before the twenty sixth day of December next, when and where the deed of the undersigned, for the said premises will be ready for delivery.

4th. The biddings will be kept open after the premises shall be struck down, and in case any purchaser shall fail to comply with any of the terms of sale, the premises struck down to him will be again put up for sale upon the same terms of sale. Provided, however, that if the holders of any of the four thousand two hundred and forty eight bonds secured by the said deed of trust should, at the sale, become the purchasers of the said premises, it shall not be necessary for them to pay the purchase money therefor, so far as concerns the proportion thereof, which, as such bondholders, they would be entitled to receive if the net amount of such purchase money were distributed pro rata equally among all of the holders of the said four thousand two hundred forty-eight bonds; but, that in such case, the bonds held by them with the coupons annexed thereto shall be brought into the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia, and the sale to them will be reported to the said court by the undersigned; and a conveyance by them to such bondholders will be withheld until the said court shall give directions in relation thereto and in relation to the disposition to be made of the proceeds of such sale.

Important to Parents and Guardians.

MOUNT DE CHANTAL
Academy of the Visitation,
NEAR WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA.

Parents in quest of a first-class school for their daughters, will do well to investigate the claims of this celebrated Academy. For thoroughness in every department of female education, Mt. de Chantal ranks pre-eminently high. Great attention is given to perfect the pupils in writing and speaking French with fluency. To those sufficiently advanced, it is the language of their recreation hours. The purity of accent and correctness of pronunciation acquired in this Institution have been a subject of surprise to the native Parisian. The renown for the superiority in music is so wide spread as to have made this Academy almost a national one. One feature, in particular, that should recommend Mt. de Chantal to the sensible parent, is the influence exercised to form the pupils to views and habits of economy, and to render them really practical and useful women of society in after years. Simplicity in dress is enforced by rule.

These facts, united to the exceedingly moderate rates of board and tuition ($200 per annum,) will, we trust, secure to this school as large and desirable a patronage in the future as it has enjoyed in the past.

For further particulars apply for prospectus to the Directress of Mount de Chantal Academy of the Visitation, near Wheeling, West Virginia.

OUR STREET RAILROAD.
Its Advantages to the City and Its Present Condition.
It is with no ordinary pleasure we again refer to the street railroad, and congratulate our citizens and the stockholders, upon its excellent management. The necessity for such an accommodation was felt by every citizen, and by strangers visiting the city, who desired to see much of our great and constant improvements. It was taken hold of by a few enterprising citizens, who invested their capital and have perfected a complete and satisfactory system of railway accommodation, and radiating to every practical point in the suburbs. The fare is low, the drivers are accommodating men, and the managers on all occasions manifest a disposition to accommodate the public. This enterprise, including real estate for stables, shops, etc, constructing 12 miles of railway, and the outfit cars, teams, etc, has cost the company $166,000 in cash; all of which has been paid; and the company does not owe a dollar. The net receipts have yielded the stockholders 10 per cent per annum, from the start except the year ending July, 1876, during which period the company had to pay damages for injuries received by persons during construction.

STARTING FROM THE CENTER

The receipts were light, and forage very high; but notwithstanding these drawbacks, the company paid a dividend of four per cent, which was remarkable, considering the universal shrinkage in business during that year. Now mule feed is about one-half the cost of the previous year, and the income from June to this time is 35 per cent better than the corresponding months for the past three years, and the company will be able to pay in July, 1877, the old ten per cent dividend. This is a gratifying result to the stockholders, who took considerable risk in investing so much money in an enterprise of that character. But such is the

that when any thing is needed they know no such word as fail, but go to work, and the thing is done. The most of the stock is owned by Richard Peters, esq, and Col. G. W. Adair, who give their personal attention to all the details in the management of the road

The success of this investment should encourage capitalists to take hold of manufacturing and other local enterprises that will increase our local population and general prosperity. This company gives employment to about forty men, who draw their wages in cash every week, and it is not long before it finds its way into provision and other stores.

CHISOLM—Anna, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Chisolm, was born in Atlanta the 4th of October, 1871, and died in Rome, Ga. at the residence of her grand parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Spullock, the 7th of October, 1876.

For five years, Anna, beautiful and gifted, gladdened the hearts of all that knew her. Beautiful in form and features, lovely beyond expression in disposition, she passed from us. Our short, weak arms were stretched forth in agony to ward off the fell destroyer, but he came and snatched from us the loveliest and dearest of all.

Patient in suffering as she had been gentle in play, calm and with a clear understanding of all that was passing around her, she breathed her last.

"Light a lamp," she said in pleading tones that rent the hearts of the watchers by her bed, when darkness had closed over her clear blue eyes How beautifully the christian faith beamed forth in the words of her heart-breaking mother as she answered: "There's a lamp burning for you, my child." Her sightless eyes still rested on her mother's face as she said: "Mama, I am through," and she passed away with a heavenly look illuminating her sweet face.

"Is she dead?" we whispered.

Ah, not dead, but only gone—only taken from us to be carried up higher; only transplanted from this world of suffering and bereavement to that blessed realm, where darkness will never close over the loved eyes, and where the lamp will burn forever.

Dear friends bow meekly to this stroke from an All-wise hand. In humble faith say: "Father, thou knowest best, Thy will, not mine, be done." ELIZABETH BURNEY.
ROME, GA.

The following lines were handed to the mother of little Anna by her friend and pastor:

WHY HE TAKES THEM.

When in the wilds the heedless sheep would stray,
And wander careless from the beaten way,
In vain the Shepherd every art would try
To make them follow him to pastures high;
He takes a lamb and bears it up the hill;
Up the steep path the mother follows still,
Till in the upland pastures green and fair,
The sheep and lambs are safely folded there.

Fold her waxen hands together,
Close the soft and dreamy eyes;
See how like a broken lily,
Calm and beautiful she lies
Our first in heaven.

There's many an empty cradle,
There's many a vacant bed,
There's many a lonely bosom,
Whose hope and joy are fled.
For thick in every graveyard,
The little hillocks lie,
But every hillock represents
An angel in the sky.

"OLD JOHN ROBINSON."
The "Big Show" on October 18 and 19.
He is called "Old John Robinson" in the bills and posters. Of Robinson it can be said to a certainty, he never failed in carrying out, showing and performing what he advertised to perform. This trip of his makes fifty-four through the southern states His immense and attractive show will be at Atlanta Wednesday and Thursday, the 18th and 19th days of October, and spread its tents to large multitudes. His "proclamation" is out, and what he says he means. His show has been here before as, in ubiquity, it has been almost everywhere, and has had accorded to him universal patronage and approval. The show is a colossal caravan of wonders, embracing a collection of animals seldom, if ever seen before, and bewildering the spectator with arenic feats almost beyond the limits of human comprehension. It is one of those exhibitions which men of families, and schools and colleges can patronize instructively to pupils and children as illustrative of the wonders of the animal kingdom, as well as the graceful and startling evolutions, acrobatic equestrian and chaste of which perfect skill and patient training is capable. Robinson prides himself on having a moral show, and in patient industry, at enormous expense and unexampled skill, has succeeded in combining the wonders of the insensate with the sensible in pleasing variety and in a manner which while it instructs the most investigating, amuses the people, and disarms prejudices of the most fastidious.

THE MAYOR'S ELECTION.
Was There a Miscount of the Votes?
The election by primary for the nomination of a democratic candidate for the mayoralty took place yesterday and was a quiet affair The race was known to be pretty close and friends quietly urged voters to the polls to uphold the standard of their favorite. The democracy were well satisfied with both the aspirants for the office of the mayoralty and the only issue was one of personal preference

The votes were counted and considered last night and appear as returned in another column of this paper. There would seem no room to question the veracity of the returns and we do not propose to do so. But a question has been raised which may vitally interest many and we think it worthy of note. The question is this: "If the votes of all those who have their elegant suits of clothing made at H. E. Dykeman's were deducted from the poll, who would then be nominated for mayor?" There has been no miscount in the actual vote, but the above would be an interesting calculation However, we dismiss it to say that Dykeman has just received a new invoice of the finest and latest styles and from these rare imported cloths is ready to make up orders and guarantee satisfaction.

Weber Pianos
While the judges accredit to Weber's competitors "larger volume, purity and duration of tone" (mere mechanical qualities), to Weber alone are accredited the highest possible musical qualities:

Sympathetic, pure and rich tone with greatest power.

It is the sympathetic and rich quality of tone which has made the Weber piano the favorite of every singer as well as the public. It is these special qualities which, combined with purity and greatest power, in a voice makes the greatest power, and which in our instrument makes it the peer of its competitors. Purity, power and duration are but exponents of mechanical excellence. Add to these qualities, as the judges say are contained in the Weber, sympathy and richness of tone, and you breathe into it richness and life, and you have the ne plus ultra of a piano.

This Weber has done at the centennial, and when the judges commend his instruments also for their solidity of construction and excellence of workmanship, they tell the public that the Weber piano is the best in the world.—Evening Post.

Organ of the Democrats.
The organ for the democratic party is the "Estey." It answers quickly to every call and in tones heard all over the country. It contains the vox jubilante, which is more reliable than the "vox populi." It will rouse the successful candidate to renewed efforts for the good of his country, and console the disappointed office-seekers, by withdrawing his thoughts from this mundane existence, and blotting from his memory the innumerable lager beer tickets he has so uselessly paid, or owes for. To be virtuous and happy, buy an Estey organ of G. P. Guilford, general agent for Estey organs, Weber, Gabler, Church & Co's, and other pianos. Warerooms, No. 32 Whitehall street.

An extended notice of John Ryan's great dry goods house is crowded out of this issue. Read his advertisement and see the immense stock he has to offer.

An Items of News.
Not much news either, news for everybody or nearly so, knows it already; and that is that Lewis Clarke has a new stock of hats, or the latest styles and at the lowest prices. He is the agent for the famous Stetson soft hat and Dunlap's celebrated silk hat. This explains, in part, the rush to Clarke's. Only in part, however, as he always keeps up to the times.

Merchant Tailor.
Mr. A. Satzky has opened a first class tailoring establishment at No 10 Alabama street. He keeps nothing but the best of goods and skilled workmen. He guarantees fits. Paying Tuition in Public Schools.
We are greatly surprised that the public schools are so well sustained under the tuition plan. It is the best evidence of the attachment of our people to these schools Even the best informed friends of the schools supposed the attendance would at once drop to 50 per cent. so soon as tuition should be demanded. But the attendance is quite up to 60 or 65 per cent, and the tuition is promptly paid. Many no doubt are paying their children's tuition who can scarcely afford to do so, but they do not wish their children to fall behind their classes nor do they wish them to learn idleness and mischief in the streets. It is a real triumph of the schools that they can pass successfully through such an ordeal. We hope the people will continue to sustain the schools and teachers in this, their trial.

On the first of January the schools will be all right again. There are about 1,400 now in attendance.

FOR SAVANNAH.
Well Done for Our Girls' High School.
ATLANTA, GA., 14th Oct., 1876
S. M. Inman, Esq, Chairman Savannah Relief Committee:
DEAR SIR: Herewith find enclosed a certificate of deposit in banking house of W M & R J Lowry for $160 00, the proceeds of an entertainment given by the pupils of the Girls' High school at the opera house on Monday last for the benefit of the suffering people of Savannah. The young ladies and their teachers wish you to forward for them this sum, which is accompanied with their profoundest sympathy for the afflicted in our sister city. They would like if it can be conveniently applied in such manner that it should be used to relieve the necessities of some of the poor children of Savannah who have been made orphans by the terrible scourge They are willing, however, that it should be dispensed where it will do the most good.
Very respectfully,
ROBT. J. LOWRY.

—Mr. J. B. Benson, a prominent merchant of Hartwell, has printed upon his letter heads the words: "Dealer in everything except liquors, playing-cards and tombstones." A wag in Charleston, who saw one of the letter-heads, thought he'd come it on Benson, and so wrote him for a second hand coffin. But Mr B. was not to be outdone, so he purchased of the Masons a mammoth coffin that they had thrown aside, and expressed it to his Charleston correspondent, at an expense to the would-be wit of $30.—Crawford Echo.

—We were pained to learn of the death of Sallie Bird, only child of our esteemed friend, Dr W M Durham, of Maxey's. She was but three years old, and a sweet and interesting child. The bereaved parents have the deepest sympathy of many friends in their irreparable loss.—Crawford Echo.

—A good hat is simply a luxury. A man cannot feel elegant without it. The hat, too, must be in style, or a man looks clumsy Hence Clarke, the hatter, is a success, for just such hats he always keeps.

Obituary.

BOOS—Died of consumption, at the residence of Mrs A M Little, on Friday evening at six o'clock, Miss Kate L Boos, sister of Andrew Boos, of Atlanta, and Peter Boos, of Hamersion, Germany. The funeral services took place at St Phillip's church, at 4 p. m. yesterday, and her remains were deposited in Oakland cemetery.

Thus closes the history of a pure and noble woman—and thus that insidious disease, one by one claims its victims from our midst.

The subject of this sketch, a native of New York, was induced by her relatives and friends to come to Atlanta several months ago, in the hope that our pure and bracing atmosphere would restore her, and she had but recently returned from a brief visit to her relatives north, when her spirit was called to return to God who gave it. Her quiet grace, her warm and cheerful heart and the patient, uncomplaining fortitude with which she endured her sufferings endeared her to every one whose pleasure it was to know her, and their heartfelt sympathies as well as those of his own, many friends are tendered to the bereaved brother, who alone of all her relatives enjoyed the sad privilege of being with her in her last moments.

But her friends mourn, not as those without hope, for she had lived the life of an exemplary Christian, and who met death with a peace that the world cannot give, and we feel that while we mourn, her bright spirit, released from suffering, is safe with Jesus and revealing in the glory of this her first Sabbath in heaven.
